Executive summary

Councils perform a breadth of functions, operating as the third tier of government in Australia. Councils have an important role in providing leadership in community, economic and infrastructure development. They work to build sustainable communities and local economies while offering an increasing range of social services and functions. Specific roles and responsibilities of local government will differ across jurisdictions, based on State/Territory legislation and community expectations. There are 546 local governing entities across Australia<sup>1</sup> servicing metropolitan, regional, rural and Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities. Ensuring a highly skilled workforce is essential for the ongoing success and future strength of the local government sector in Australia.

The Local Government Industry Reference Committee (IRC) has responsibility for 23 qualifications, packaged in the LGA04 Local Government Training Package. Job roles covered by the training package are broad and profiles will differ across councils. The qualifications are commonly used across the local government sector for a number of job roles. These include the outdoor workforce supported by specialist qualifications in operational works; administrative staff, and those working in specialist planning, regulatory services and environment roles.

The Local Government IRC commits to thorough and inclusive national consultation to ensure training package products under its remit are reflective of current industry skills needs and provide opportunities for workforce development that actively contributes to the variability and productivity of the sector/s. Recognition is given to the need for training package related decisions to be made based on appropriate levels of industry engagement and input.

Further, the IRC acknowledges the COAG Industry and Skills Ministers' priorities and will utilise consultation activities, through the support of SkillsIQ, to gain a national perspective on:

- opportunities to identify and remove obsolete training package products from the system
- industry expectations for training delivery and assessment to be documented within Implementation Guides
- opportunities to enhance portability of skills from one related occupation to another
- opportunities to remove unnecessary duplication within the system and create training package products that may have application to multiple industry sectors
- opportunities for the development of skill sets.

Where available the IRC will seek and maximise opportunities to work collaboratively with other IRCs.

An analysis of the sector, in tandem with industry consultation, has identified a number of challenges and opportunities which have a direct impact on the sector, including:

- skills shortages and complexity in training opportunities (these will vary across individual councils)
- meeting the increasing demand for services within fiscal constraints
- forced amalgamations in some jurisdictions.

In addition, the sector has identified the following factors as having direct impact on the composition and skills needs of the workforce:

- change in demographics and working with diversity
- attraction and retention of appropriately skilled workers for regional and remote areas
- changes in work practices linked to the adoption of new technology.

This Industry Skills Forecast identifies a number of national trends in workplace design that will impact on the skills needs of the sector. This information, along with industry-identified skills priorities, will directly inform the coming review of relevant training package products.

Information contained within this Industry Skills Forecast has been sourced via a variety of methods, including:

- desktop research, to develop an understanding of existing research and views on skill requirements in the sector;
- an industry workforce survey which was available to all stakeholders across all industries, and
- consultation with the IRC, in order to confirm that the information is both valid and accurately reflects industry views.

The Industry Skills Forecast proposes a schedule for the ongoing review of relevant training products, to inform the development of the four-year rolling National Schedule.

The training products allocated to this IRC have not been fully reviewed since 2004 and are not yet aligned to the 2012 Standards for Training Packages. The training products in this sector are already subject to a case for change activity order, which is required to set out the evidence on which the IRCs recommendation for changing the LGA04 Local Government Training Package is based, and to ensure that the qualifications align to current job roles that have been impacted by new technologies, legislation and regulatory change.

A. Administrative information

Name of IRC

Local Government Industry Reference Committee

Name of Skills Service Organisation (SSO)

SkillsIQ Limited (SkillsIQ)

This document details the proposed four year schedule of work from 1 July 2016 to 30 June 2020 as agreed between the Local Government IRC and SkillsIQ.

This version of the Industry Skills Forecast was refreshed in April 2017.

About SkillsIQ

As a Skills Service Organisation (SSO), SkillsIQ is funded by the Department of Education and Training to support its allocated IRCs, which are responsible for the development and maintenance of the following training packages:

- Community Services
- Health
- Local Government
- Public Sector
- Floristry
- Hairdressing and Beauty Services
- Funeral Services
- Retail Services
- Sport, Fitness and Recreation
- Tourism, Travel and Hospitality

B: Sector overview

Local Government – Australia

Local Government is the third tier of government in Australia, the level closest and best placed to deliver services within their communities.

There are 546 local governing entities across Australia<sup>2</sup> servicing metropolitan, regional, rural and Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities. They vary in size and complexity, ranging from small rural councils with under 50 employees, to large metropolitan councils with around 8,000 employees.

The roles and responsibilities of local government will differ across jurisdictions, based on State/Territory legislation and community expectations. The principal piece of legislation that governs local government in most States/Territories is the Local Government Act which sets out the key principles by which councils must operate. In total there are about 60 legislative instruments that apply to local government.

Common functions of councils include:

- infrastructure and property services, including local roads, bridges, footpaths, drainage, waste collection and management
- the provision of recreation facilities, such as parks, sports fields and stadiums, golf courses, swimming pools, sports centres, halls, camping grounds and caravan parks
- health services, such as water and food inspection, immunisation services, toilet facilities, noise control, meat inspection and animal control
- community services, such as child care, aged care and accommodation, community care and welfare services
- building services, including inspections, licensing, certifications and enforcement
- planning and development approval
- administration of facilities, such as airports and aerodromes, ports and marinas, cemeteries, parking facilities and street parking

- cultural facilities and services, such as libraries, art galleries and museums
- water and sewerage services in some States
- other services, such as abattoirs, sale-yards and group purchasing schemes<sup>3</sup>
- tendering
- procurements
- principal contractors.

In regional, rural and remote areas, local government is more often than not the principal employer, the primary economic driver and the only level of government delivering basic social and community services.

The scope of occupations employed by local governments is extremely broad. It is estimated there are approximately 245 different occupations which can be categorised as follows:

- community services
- public health services
- cultural education and information services
- sporting, recreational and entertainment services
- environment conservation, protection and improvement
- waste removal, treatment and disposal
- pest eradication and control
- energy production, supply and conservation
- water, sewerage and drainage
- fire prevention, protection and mitigation
- land and property development
- housing
- industry development and assistance
- tourism development and assistance
- horticulture
- clerical and administration
- engineering
- ordinance and regulation.

Local governments play a key role in the Australian economy. Local government nationally employs just under 192,500 Australians;<sup>4</sup> owns and manages non-financial assets with an estimated written-down value of $354 billion (2013-14); raises around 3.5% of Australia's total taxation revenue per annum, and has annual operating expenditure of around $33 billion (2013-14).<sup>5</sup>

Local government works in a fiscally restrained environment. In aggregate, councils raise more than 80% of their own revenue. Individual councils have differing abilities to raise revenue, based on location, population size, rate base and the ability to levy user charges.<sup>6</sup> All impact a council's ability to raise revenue. Revenue is raised through user charges, taxation (rates) and grants from State and Federal governments. However, it should be noted that many rural and regional councils do not collect the same revenues as their urban and larger regional counterparts and are consequently much more reliant on other levels of government. Additionally:

- The Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander segment is almost entirely reliant on government funding
- The rural/remote segment is very heavily reliant on government funding, with its own source of revenue accounting for less than 20% on average of the total operating revenue
- The rural/regional segment's own-source revenue accounts for about 45% on average of total operating revenue.<sup>7</sup>

Roles within local government can be separated into subcategories of councillors; executives and senior management; line managers and supervisors; professionals; administration; technical; trades; and operational workers. There is substantial literature highlighting the importance of 'lifelong learning' to ongoing employability in the changing employment environment.<sup>8</sup> Sector-specific research, funded through the ACELG Workforce Development Programme and informed by the national government's workforce strategy, Future-proofing Local Government: National Workforce Strategy 2013 – 2020, illustrates that the preferred topics and content for education and professional development program across all sub-categories include strategy and vision (73%), community engagement (72%) and change management (67%). The findings also suggest that peer learning and good practice exchange methodologies should be incorporated in education and professional development program for local government.<sup>9</sup>

Registered Training Organisations using the training products

The National Register of VET (www.training.gov.au) provides information about Registered Training Organisations (RTOs) and the approved scope of each RTO to deliver nationally recognised training. The following table indicates the number of RTOs with the above qualifications on their scope of delivery, as at 13 April 2017. It is important to note that although an RTO may have a qualification on their scope of delivery, they may not be delivering any nationally recognised training for that qualification. As a result, the data below may not be a true reflection of the extent of delivery.

Enrolment and completion figures

The following section details enrolment and completion figures of the qualifications in the remit of this IRC. This data has been sourced from the National Centre for Vocational Education Research (NCVER). NCVER's VET data, used within this report, provides information on publicly funded training in public providers; publicly funded training in private providers; and fee-for-service training in public providers.

A number of other factors also influence the data. These factors should be taken into consideration when reviewing the data presented below:

- Government funding – declining enrolments and completions often directly correlate with a reduction in funding availability
- Timing of release of training product – the year in which the training product is released on the national register will impact when data becomes available
- Usage of current and superseded training products concurrently – in some years data will occur in both current and superseded qualifications
- Exemptions in reporting – some providers are exempt from reporting - for example volunteer organisations.

It is important to note that the data set does not include fee-for-service VET by private providers. As a result, the figures listed in this table do not reflect the total uptake. In 2014, for example, the Local Government Association of Queensland (an RTO) reported the following enrolment levels:

- 224 enrolments in LGA50104 Diploma of Local Government Administration
- 37 LGA50208 Diploma of Local Government (Health And Environment)
- 159 LGA50508 Diploma of Local Government (Planning).

From January 2016 all RTOs were required to submit data under the Unique Student Identifier (USI) initiative, providing a more reliable data set of enrolments and completions. To ensure accurate data is used in the case for change, all RTOs with the LGA04 on scope will be surveyed to determine actual enrolment and completion figures.

It is acknowledged by industry that apprentice and trainee numbers are low. However, it should be noted that not all jurisdictions have declared these qualifications as traineeships, and very few have declared them as apprenticeships. Further to this, entry for many job roles in the sector are at a high AQF level, commonly Diploma. These factors will most likely significantly impact the take-up of many qualifications as apprenticeships and/or traineeships.

Industry identified that flexibility in training products is essential for the sector, as job roles and profiles are different across local government. Additionally, entry to industry will differ across sectors. Qualifications are commonly used across the local government sector for a number of job roles, but not across all. Skills sets are also increasingly being used by councils to develop the skills of workers in particular areas.

Peak bodies and key industry players

The following list represents a range of organisations that perform a variety of key roles in this sector. These organisations and their networks are well placed to offer industry insights at the time of training package review. Industry engagement will include a broad and inclusive range of stakeholders beyond those included in this list, as relevant to the nature of training package product review.

- State/territory local government associations
  - Local Government Association of Northern Territory
  - Local Government Association of Queensland
  - Local Government Association of South Australia
  - Local Government Association Tasmania
  - Western Australian Local Government Association
  - Local Government New South Wales
  - Municipal Association of Victoria
- Unions
  - United Services Union
  - Australian Services Union
  - Australian Workers Union
- Professional associations
  - Environmental Health Australia
  - Planning Institute of Australia
- Registered Training Organisations both public and private
- Large and small private employers across metropolitan, regional, rural and remote areas.

Challenges and opportunities in the sector

Skills shortages and training

Growing community expectations and a tight fiscal environment directly impact on local government's provision of services, both in terms of scope and level of services. The roles and responsibilities devolved from State and Territory governments to the local government sector vary across jurisdictions and are subject to change over time within any given state/territory. These variations in devolution directly impact on the skill requirements of the local government sector. For example, in Victoria there is a significant number of people (around 6,000) employed to deliver home and community services. Growth in other sectors will also influence available labour. An increase in the mining workforce, for example, will significantly impact skilled labour for many roles across other sectors. Additionally, regional and remote councils have their own issues, largely because of their geography and the difficulty in attracting people to those locations, and essentially those councils will need to 'grow their own'. Individual councils will each have their own idiosyncrasies which continually change.

Specific gaps have been identified within individual councils, amongst training providers and across the local government sector in general. Some smaller, more fiscally restrained councils, for example in rural, remote or discrete Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities, often lack the capacity or information to define their own training needs. The majority of these councils have no dedicated HR function.

An additional issue is the lack of facilitated pathways for individuals between VET and tertiary education qualifications. The rapid changes within the operating environment often outpace the time needed to develop and accredit courses, and this is further exacerbated by the significant costs involved in preparing and delivering relevant training materials.<sup>10</sup> There needs to be a balance between knowledge and experience to allow a closer alignment of VET and higher education sectors. Factors that promote the transition from VET to higher education include enhanced clarity of the relationship between recognised prior learning and the proposed degree; the quality of the VET qualification; ensuring foundation subjects for the degree are covered; and supporting students to be more university-ready.

Increasing demand within fiscal constraints

Demand for services is generally increasing across government bodies, especially local government. Growth seems to be a result of an increasing community expectation to provide a broader range of services, as well as the need to meet the demands where population is increasing, as well as ageing. Economic factors and budget cuts were identified by 57% of councils as impacting or shaping the local government workforce over the next five years.<sup>11</sup>

The 2014-15 federal budget outlined the pausing of CPI (Consumer Price Index) indexation on Financial Assistance Grants (FAGs) for the next 3 years. In essence, the pause in indexation will equate to a reduction of $925.2 million in revenue for local government over the next four years,<sup>12</sup> which local governments around Australia report will significantly impact councils, both internally and at the community level. The Australian Government paid about $2.3 billion to local government in 2014-15<sup>13</sup> under the FAG programme and has budgeted for roughly the same aggregate grant payment for 2016-17.<sup>14</sup>

Rate capping in some jurisdictions is also reported to increase financial pressures on councils. Increasing community expectations together with a reduction in funding will result in some councils needing to prioritise the services they can provide in the future. For example, over the last three to four years, one billion dollars per year, has been cut from government funding to councils in Queensland. This is the cumulative impact of policy and funding decisions by State and Federal governments. For Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander councils in Queensland the cut to one of their staged government grants resulted in a 21% reduction in employment numbers.<sup>15</sup>

Councils are operating in a fiscally-constrained environment and must generate efficiencies in order to continue to provide the scope and level of services demanded by the community. Councils are looking to streamline services, redesign work, multi-skill staff and embrace technology, all of which impact on the skilling requirements of the workforce.

Councils are stable employers of choice, offering a secure merit-based work environment as evidenced, for example, by declining turnover rates in recent years, from 12.6% in 2010 to 7.45% in 2015 within the Local Government sector in Queensland. However, turnover varies considerably depending on the type and location of the council. For example, average turnover as at June 30 2015 for Local Government in Queensland was 7.45% but the range was from 3% to over 80%.<sup>16</sup>

Turnover, in combination with an ageing workforce, will generate continued demand for the Local Government Training Package as it is essential that new employees of local governments are appropriately trained. Is therefore essential that the training package reflects current work practices and equips learners with the skills to develop the specialised knowledge (of specific legislation and devolution of roles and responsibilities, for example) that is required for work in the sector.

Amalgamations

Amalgamation presents an ongoing issue for local governments in Western Australia (WA) and New South Wales (NSW), with 24% of councils (all but one from WA and NSW) stating that this will likely impact the industry over the next five years.<sup>17</sup> In NSW, for example, on 12 May 2016, 19 new councils replaced 42 existing councils, and there are several additional amalgamation proposals still pending. Past experience of both forced and voluntary amalgamations and boundary changes shows that managing the workforce and workplace issues is one of the most significant challenges to be faced.<sup>18</sup>

C: Employment

Local government nationally employs just under 192,500 Australians.<sup>19</sup> As an employer, local government requires a diverse workforce that encompasses a wide range of occupations, requiring a very broad range of skills from its personnel.

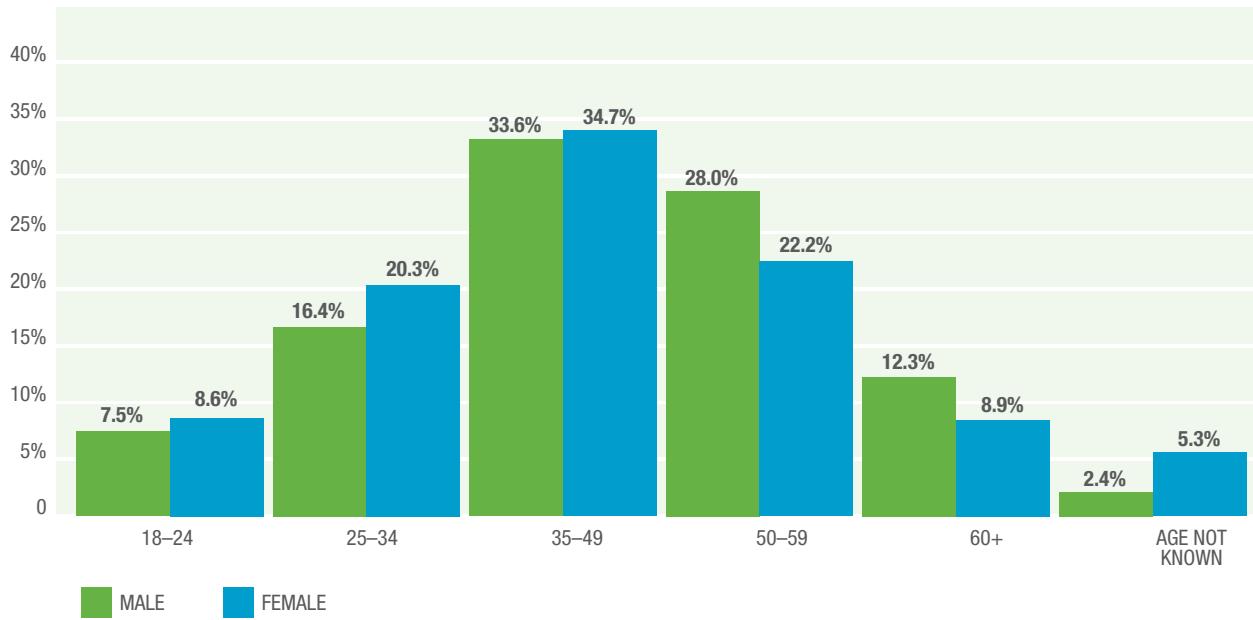

Although men make up a larger proportion of the local government workforce nationally (54%), by jurisdiction there are large differences in gender distribution driven by the range of occupations that reflect the strategic priorities and legislative requirements of each State or Territory. The local government workforce is predominantly older, with 37% of employees aged 50 years or over, compared to the Australian labour force average of 29%. Male employees are, on average, older than female employees, with 41% of the men working in local government aged 50 years or more compared to just 32% of women.<sup>20</sup>

Local governments also employ a large number of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people. According to the Australian Bureau of Statistics (2011), local government employs 12.5% of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander workers nationally, making it the second largest industry employer of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people. The following graph shows a comparison of the proportion of employees in local government identifying as Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander to the proportion of the total Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander population in each State and the Northern Territory.

A highly skilled workforce is essential for the ongoing success and future strength of the local government sector in Australia. Councils offer an increasing range of services that may once have been performed by State or Commonwealth governments. The increasing devolution of roles from Federal and State governments, accompanied by the increasing demand for new and innovative services, has resulted in changing roles and responsibilities for employees, who are now often required to perform a variety of roles across complementary disciplines, especially in regional and rural councils.

Workforce supply-side challenges and opportunities

Regional and remote communities

According to ABS (2016) data,<sup>21</sup> in 2015 approximately two-thirds of Australia's population (15.87 million people) lived in greater capital cities and one-third (7.91 million people) lived in the rest of Australia. While 73% of people aged 25-29 years resided in capital cities, reflective of younger adults preferring cities where they can access education, employment and other opportunities, only 60% of people aged 70-74 (the lowest percentage of all age groups) lived in capital cities.

Creating a sustainable workforce in regional and remote communities raises additional challenges, including how best to support a workforce that generally has a lower qualification profile and greater difficulties accessing training and professional development, as well as the broader issues ranging from the higher cost of living to housing shortages. Regional and remote councils face difficulties recruiting, attracting and retaining staff, with the main contributing reasons being salary competition, lack of suitably skilled workers and geographical remoteness.

The proportion of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander employees has been highlighted above, and is a strength of the sector. It is important to continue supporting the development and employment growth of this population, especially in regional and remote areas where councils face difficulties in attraction and retention of staff.

the skills to work in such an environment. Employment and recruitment models will need to target specific demographics, such as women, skilled migrants, people from culturally and linguistically diverse (CALD) backgrounds and Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Australians to promote workplace equality. To maximise service delivery and community engagement the council workforce should represent the diversity of its constituents and reflect the community within which it operates. This provides an opportunity for local government to embrace diversity, enhancing efficiency and, in turn, the bottom line.

Changes in demographics

Australia has an ageing population, with one in five Australians expected to be over 65 years old in 2035. This will have specific implications for local government as employees aged 50 years or over are estimated to represent 37% of the local government workforce, compared to the Australian average of 29%.<sup>22</sup> Retirement of Australia's ageing workforce will result in industries likely to lose a large number of highly skilled workers with specialist knowledge. This trend is likely to bring with it recruitment challenges for workers at management levels as well as create an increased competitive environment for workers (both local and migrant) within this sector. There is a need to develop and promote tapered retirement models that can productively harness the skills of an ageing population, ensure knowledge transfer and positions are available for younger labour market entrants.<sup>23</sup>

The high influx of migrants coming to Australia each year, of whom 80% are of working age, will help counteract Australia's ageing workforce and contribute to cultural diversity. In the future, an organisation's employee profile is likely to contain more diverse age groups and more diverse cultural backgrounds. The local government workforce will need to promote workplace diversity and equity, ensuring that it has a flexible and multi-skilled workforce to service the needs of the community. In turn the training package will need to be adaptable to meet the needs of a diverse labour pool and provide

D: Skills outlook

International and national trends

The Local Government Training Package supports a broad range of roles. All employees require access to generic skills that enable effective operation in, and understanding of, the industry but also require skills and knowledge in either a discipline specific to local government, such as planning, land management or environmental regulation, or in a discipline from other sectors, such as librarianship or child care work. For that reason, local government employees require a blend of skills from the Local Government Training Package but also across other industry training packages to meet their working needs.

Rise of the enterprise skills

Jobs of the future will require Australians to be literate, numerate and digitally literate. Most commonly-required skills include those such as communication, teamwork, problem solving, creativity and digital literacy (collectively referred to as 'enterprise skills'). The local government industry demands similar skills. The industry has identified the increasing importance of communication, teamwork and customer service skills. Leadership and management, information communications and technology (ICT), digital literacy and project management also continue to remain strong training needs areas, as do LLN (Language, Literature & Numeracy) skills. As demand for services increases, and considering the scope of occupations working in local government, technology will have a significant impact across the sector. For example, computer-guided automation has become increasingly prevalent across numerous disciplines, including manufacturing, planning and decision-making. More than five million jobs, almost 40% of Australian jobs that exist today, have a moderate to high likelihood of disappearing in the next 10 to 15 years due to technological advancements.<sup>24</sup>

Digital change

The exponential rise in technological advances, including the rise in device connectivity and the introduction of automated systems, is transforming supply chains, reshaping the workforce and redefining jobs.<sup>25</sup> Digital technology is changing employment markets and organisational structures. Jobs of the future are likely to be more flexible, agile, networked and connected.<sup>26</sup>

Local government's workforce will need to adapt to major technological changes over the next decade. These changes, when implemented, will effectively drive productivity growth. Technological change will be influenced by:

- Innovations and applications emerging on the back of the National Broadband Network (NBN) rollout;
- Greater utilisation of mobile applications and computing;
- Web 2.0 interactive collaborations and open-source data; and
- Social networking and crowd-sourcing.

These technological advances will require new skills as well as new mindsets, placing an even greater premium on the language, literacy and numeracy skills of the workforce, including digital literacy.<sup>27</sup>

Elected member training and development

Councillors are democratically elected to represent and service the interests of their community. As has been identified earlier in the Industry Skills Forecast, councils are bound and governed by a specific piece of legislation, the Local Government Act, which sets out the key principles to which they must adhere. Local government is a highly complex operation, with councillors playing a vital leadership, highly strategic, governance role. A councillor will have a number of different duties, essentially representing the interests of the council and the people that live in it. However, as these positions are elected, jurisdictions may or may not have any specific requirements in regards to a councillor's previous skills, knowledge and experience.

As has been highlighted in this Industry Skills Forecast, councils work within fiscal constraints and often lack the resources to support councillor training. The requirement for councils to plan for the elected member to undertake training and development is regulated only in some jurisdictions. For those elected councillor in those jurisdictions where training is not regulated, the councillor will often have a steep learning curve to develop the skills and knowledge to govern within the framework of the act.

While there are many short courses provided by the state/territory local government associations, systematic training programs or pathways to tertiary education for councillors is limited. In addition, training opportunities will often develop general management skills, therefore not being consistent with the legislations to the councils where they operate. Areas where councillors need skills development include:

- communication skills
- local government finance
- governance and probity
- policy development
- managing issues
- local government law.

In some councils there is a high turnover of councillors as a result of the election cycle making training and development opportunities difficult to schedule. It is essential to refine elected member training to ensure councillors have the specialised skills and knowledge required for the role.

Industry emphasises that, when considering broad workforce skills, varying interpretations and definitions may have been offered by respondents, and a generic skill may have vastly different meanings, and applications, to different individuals and organisations. Industry cautions that a lack of consistent usage and understanding therefore requires careful consideration when reviewing and determining industry skills priorities. Further industry validation of the skills required by the sector is necessary.

Skill requirements

The skills required by industry have largely been determined by an industry workforce survey which was available to all stakeholders across all industries. There were a total of 1,480 respondents to the survey undertaken by SkillsIQ. Of these, 86 respondents identified themselves as relating to the Local Government sector (this is out of a total of 571 councils nationally). The following tables represent a collation of the necessary skills identified by respondents for the next three to five years, as well as rankings of pre-determined generic workforce skills.

E: Other relevant skills-related insights for this sector

The increasing demand for services has resulted in changes in roles and responsibilities for employees who are now often required to perform a variety of roles across complementary disciplines, especially in regional and rural councils; and has also created the need to produce more for less, creating a perceived emphasis on operations rather than training. The Local Government qualifications framework needs to support the career progression of individuals who require their industry knowledge and skills to be enriched with management and leadership skills. It has been noted that a more strategic approach to training and development is necessary, focussed on developing in-house talent to step into leadership positions. Similarly, there is an industry demand for developing the skills of current employees so that they are able to move flexibly between occupations experiencing skills shortages, which would yield positive outcomes.

F: Proposed Schedule of Work: 2016-17 – 2019-20

Time-critical issues

The LGA04 Local Government Training Package has not been aligned to 2012 Standards for Training Packages and is already subject to a case for change activity order, which is required to set out the evidence on which the IRC's recommendation for undertaking broad industry consultation to completely revise components to ensure they meet current workforce needs is based. The Local Government IRC has advised that the Local Government Training Package no longer meets industry needs and no longer maps against current work practices, job roles and skill needs. The training package has failed to keep pace with legislative changes, recent regulatory changes, the scope of the sector and new technologies. It is for this reason that all training products have been listed in year one.

Interdependencies

Local Government employees require a blend of skills from the Local Government Training Package but also from a range of other industry training packages to meet their working needs. The Local Government Training Package imports 45 units from other Training Packages, mainly from Business Services, Construction, Water and Public Sector Training Packages. Due to the high flexibility of the Local Government qualifications, the number of imported units within the package is quite low, but the real usage would be a lot higher.

Where the review of a training product is expected to be contentious or involve lengthy work

The Local Government Training Package has not been fully reviewed since 2004, when the package was revised and superseded the LGA00 Local Government Training Package. Since then there have been minor amendments to wording due to a combination of factors, namely a flexible packaging policy; a partial review of some of the qualifications for compliance and regulatory purposes, and minor changes to the required skills and/or knowledge in a restricted number of units of competency. There have also been minor amendments to reflect sustainability and environmental legislation and to remove superfluous qualifications. The last version (LGA04 V3) was developed in 2012.

Due to the extent to which the Training Package needs to be reviewed it is envisaged that the work to accurately reflect industry requirements will be lengthy.

Where the IRC is advising that a training product will need to be reviewed more than once in the four-year period

The IRC notes that there may be instances of unforeseen change triggering a need to review training package products outside of where listed in the national schedule. Examples of unforeseen change include, but are not limited to, changes to legislation, regulation and industry licencing.
